Cougar-Squak-Tiger Mountain Corridor

Many citizens and agencies, including King County, Washington State Parks and Department of Natural Resources and the City of Issaquah, worked together to create this public land connection between all three mountains.

Area

King County manages 1019 acres in the corridor and Squak Mountain State Park is 1,545 acres.

Trail uses

Hiking, with some horseback-riding trails in Squak Mountain State Park. There is no mountain biking allowed. There is a steep climb to the East Ridge Trail from Issaquah.

Access

The Cougar-Squak-Tiger Mountain Corridor is 15 minutes east of Seattle on I-90 and borders the south edge of Issaquah.

There is access to the East Ridge Trail within the Issaquah city limits, from Sunrise Place SE and Sycamore Drive SE.

The West Access Trail is accessible off Renton-Issaquah Road, SR-900.

There is access to the Bullitt Fireplace Trail off of Mountainside Drive SE.

There is access to the Cougar/Squak Corridor from the Squak Mountain State Park main entrance on the south side of the park off of SE May Valley Road.

The best access to the Cougar/Squak Corridor is Margaret's Way from the parking area off of Renton Issaquah Road, SR-900.

COUGAR-SQUAK TIGER MT CORRIDOR

Cougar, Squak and Tiger Mountains, also known as "the Issaquah Alps", rise above Lake Sammamish and together provide more than 15,000 acres of connected public forest lands. The lands on either side of Squak Mountain create a green "corridor" that connects to Cougar and Tiger mountains. There are more than 100 miles of connected trails and the dense forests and wilderness are home to numerous birds, fish and wildlife.
